

Quantum physics presents intriguing possibilities for achieving computational gains after conventional miniaturization reaches its limits. Accordingly, we describe a nuclear magnetic-resonance quantum computer demonstrating a quantum algorithm that exponentially outperforms classical algorithms.